Excerpt: . . . regret I make any remarks upon him, or any part of his conduct. If something be due to him for personal civilities, and more to his station, I feel that something is also due to my own character and office, and more to truth, to justice, and to the Church. In introducing also any remarks that may have been made in conversations between Bishop Provoost and myself, I shall do violence to my own feelings. But I am compelled to this course by the conduct of Mr. . Jones and others, who, with the view of injuring me, have not scrupled to lay open the sanctuary of private confidence. With Bishop Provoost I think I ought to find an excuse in the circumstance that Mr. Jones, in his late performance, professes to state part of a conversation which took place between Bishop Provoost and myself,...
