When God tells a psychologist he must run for president to prevent the murder of millions of patients and save Western Civilization As We Know It, he writes this book as his campaign autobiography. The psychologist is a political liberal, and a theological skeptic who does not believe in God, but they talk. The only catch is the doctor is locked up in his own mental hospital, diagnosed with mania and psychosis. In the lunatic asylum, the Mad-Doctor lives with fellow inmates Wild Bill (Buckley) and Lady Bird (Johnson). His closest confidants are George Berkeley (the Bishop), Soren Kierkegaard (the Hunchback), and the likes of Kant, Hume, Voltaire, Dorothy Parker, Mahalia Jackson, and Martin Luther. Asylum visitors include Descartes, Abelard, Aristotle, Plato, Elmer Gantry, and Ambrose Bierce. Among others, communications are received from Winston Churchill, Dr. Thomas More, William Jennings Bryan, Mark Twain, Aaron Burr, Michael Servetus, Eleanor of Aquitaine, and the prophet Ezekiel. One of Mad-Doc's six ex-wives, the mother of his children, volunteers to lead his escape team from the asylum, where...
