This little volume is the result of autumnal relaxation from the drudgery of avocation in the metropolis. The name of the author, and the species of drudgery which he undergoes can be of little or no interest to the reader; and it little matters whether he work with the head or the hand - with the pen or the brush - with the hammer or the hand-saw. It boots not whether he carries a hod of bricks or a bag of briefs - whether he is most conversant with the composition of paints, potions, or protocols. A tourist has one principal object in view - to render himself agreeable both to those who travel the same circuit, and to those who only travel round their own libraries. There are some other objects, however, of considerable importance. During the last twenty years, the tide of English tourists has annually rushed up the Rhine - winded through the valleys of Switzerland - scaled the mighty Alps - and spread over the plains of fair Italy. More of our nobility and gentry have stood on the Jura and the Rhigi, than on Skiddaw and Snowdon - on the Palatine Hill than on Salisbury Crags. More of them have ascended the Simplon and the St. Bernard, than Ben-Cruachan and Ben-Lawers. They have become more familiar with Como and...
